

query time versus reference length

